A Spirit Concert. THE QUEER VISION OF AN AGED MUSICAL AMA-TEUR AND ITS EXPLANATION. Dr. Edward H. Clark, in a book he has just published, entitled "Visions; a Study of Faise Sight," narrates the following strange incident: "Mr. A., a man of parts and education, was a retired merchant. Possessed of an ample fortune, he devoted more time to intellectual and esthetic pursuits than to business. He was particularly fond of music, was familiar with the works of the great composers, and heard with delight the artists who interpreted them. During the Seventh Symphony has a clear moral a long life he was a frequent attendant at operas and concerts where the best music declares that he prefers the Seventh Symphony has a clear moral advantage over the dishonest amateur, who declares that he prefers the Seventh Symwas produced. Early in his career he occa-sionally visited Europe, and when he did so he improved the opportunities which his visits afforded of indulging his musical tastes more liberally than he could do in this country. The fact of his possessing a fine musical taste, and of his indulging and cultivating it, is emphasized in this connection in consequence of its possible or probable relation to the phenomena which will be related presently. It should be added, that he was a man of more than ordinary intellectual ability, and was endowed with the rare gift of good common sense. Few persons could be found less likely than he to be led astray by their imagination or superstition. Armed with an active temperament, good habits, and a strong physical organization, he enjoyed good health until after the age of eighty. He then suffered for two or three years from a cerebral malady, which at length terminated fatally. A moderate degree of deafness, persistent unnitus aurium, occasional vertigo, and slight loss of memory, were the prominent symptoms of his con-dition for a year or two after he became an octogenarian. Toward the close of life, incoherence, delirium, stupor, and the like, indicated with sufficient certainty the presence of severe cerebral disease. Its tained by a post-mortem examination.

The demand of those who have never learned it a man cannot be a national bank-rupt act by repeal shall cease to operate. This, of course, will cause trouble and make people move about from State to State. If a man cannot be a national bankrupt he account is given, as nearly as I can remember it, in his own language, with the exception of changing the first to the third per-

"He had retired on the night referred to at his usual hour and in his usual health. Nothing had occurred for the day previous, or for several days previous, to disturb him in any way, so far as he could recollect. He had partaken of his usual diet and followed his customary mode of life. Soon after retiring he fell asleep, and slept well until about 2 A. M., when he was awakened by the sound of music, which seemed to come from the street near his house. Thinking a serenade was going on he got up to ascertain where it was, but discovered nothing. The sound ceased when he arose. On returning to bed he heard the music again. and was at the same time surprised by the appearance of three persons standing near each other in his chamber, opposite the foot of his bed. It was his habit to sleep with the gaslight burning feebly, near the head of his bed. He turned the gas on to its full power and inspected the intruders. They appeared to be musicians, who were humming cal performance. He rang a bell, which summoned his man-servant. John soon arrived, and was ordered to put the strangers out 'There is nobody here, sir,' was John's reply to the order. For a moment Mr. A. was not only amazed but alarmed. 'What?' he exclaimed, 'do you see no one there?' 'No one,' said John. 'Go where those chairs are and move them,' was Mr. A.'s next direction. John did so. The strangers stepped aside, but did not go out. By this time Mr. A. had gathered his wits about him, and was satisfied that he was the victim of a hallucination; and be determined to observe its phenomena, carefully. Accordingly he bade his servant depart, and prepared to watch his visitors. But they were so life-like and human that he was again staggered, and recalling John, told him to go for the housekeeper. She soon came, and on being interrogated confirmed John's statements that there were no strangers in the chamber and no sounds to be heard. his reason, and again resolved to go on with the investigation of the strange phenomena. The musicians had now resumed their position near the window and opposite the foot of the bed. Mr. A. turned the light of the gas full upon them. He looked at his watch, which marked the hour of half-past 2. He then arranged his pillows so as to sit almost upright in bed, and waited for the next scene in the play. He was able to note the size, form, dress, and faces of the performers. One was a large man, who bore some resemblance to Brignoli. The two others were of less size and shorter stature than their companion. All were habited in dress-coats, with white waistcoats, and wore white cravats and white gloves. After a little time, spent in cough-other in a foreign language, which Mr. A.

took to be Italian, but they did not address him. Occasionally they changed their position, turned in various directions, and part of the time sat down. Mr. A. said the singing was excellent; he had rarely heard better. After the first feeling of surprise and amazement had passed away he enjoyed the music exceedingly. The performance continued in this way for some time, when it suddenly came to an end. The singing ceased, and the singers vanished. He looked at his watch, and found concert. He reflected for a while upon this strange occurrence, but not being able to arrive at any satisfactory explanation of it he turned his gas down and went to sleep. The next morning he called at my office, as previously stated, to ascertain, if possible, what pranks his brain had been playing, and if he should regard them as a warning of his approaching departure." The explanation of this extraordinary case on physiological principles, as given by Dr. Clarke, is ingenious and acute, if not perhaps entirely satisfactory. The subject of the vision, as he argues, being an ardent lover of music and a frequenter of concerts and musical entertainments, the cells of his the sound of music and at the sight of musical performers. During his long life the sical performers. During his long life the same groups must have been formed repeatedly, both in his visual and auditory apparatus. For some time before the vision he had suffered from cerebral difficulties, and ut the time there was more or less congestion of the brain. These conditions were favorable to functional derangement of the nerve denters. The slightest stimules would put in motion the whole or a part of the cerebral machinery. In this state he went to bed and fell asleep. White sleeping the notes of a screnade, or the vibrations of distant. of a serenade, or the vibrations of distant music, or even the excitement of a dream, would be sufficient to arouse his automatic will first after treating seventeen bandsome would be sufficient to arouse his automatic cerebral apparatus into musical activity. Just as a pricking of a finger will rouse the corresponding spinal ganglion enough to move the wounded member, transferring the sensation lato reflex motion, so a rhythmical vibration touching the auditory ganglia roused them into activity, transforming sensation into ideation. His visual and auditory centres had acquired the habit, in musical matters, of acting together. Hence, as soon as even a slight stimulus had set the chords of his auditory apparatus into automatic action, producing subthe visual apparatus followed its example. As soon as this was done the two processes went on harmoniously together. During this singular process, and after it, he was so little moved, either intellectually, or emotionally, that the vision should be classed as a simple automatic movement.

There is a well-marked scale of taste, as there is a scale of sounds, and scarcely any two persons can be found who are upon the same round of this very long ladder. RUSSIAN OFFICER A WORKMAN IN AMERICAN SHOPS.

An incident, quite peculiar of its kind, essentially Russian in character, has just come to light, which has become the leading gossip in Philadelphia. Some fifteen months ago workman, speaking English fluently, with but a slight foreign accent, applied for a position as a machinest in one of the largest shops in Willmington, Del., where marineengines and iron-hulls are built. There day the new employe was to be seen at the work-bench prosecuting his labors. A planing-machine was placed soon under his charge, and he displayed so much skill and judgment in the tasks allotted to him that work requiring the greatest exactness was soon confided to the foreigner's care. The man was remarkably quiet and industrious, and, though reticent, was universally liked by the American machinists. He lodged in a boarding-house with his fellow-craftsmen. After remaining in the principal shop in Wilmington for some three months, one day the man drew his wages and left for Chester, Del., where, furnished with letters of introduction from the superintendent of the Wilmington shop to the boss in Chester, he soon found a new position. In Chester he remained some four months, and was employed in riveting the iron bulls and in bending the plates. His nesses, Mr. A. yielded to the decision of superior intelligence soon commended him ious to occupy. This was in the draftingroom, where the hulls were designed. In this new occupation his skill was instantly remarked. At Chester he remained some six months, when he left quite suddenly and repaired to Philadelphia. Here the foreign workman endeavored to enter into the largest locomotive factory in the world. but his request was at first refused. How he managed to get a footing in the Philadelphia shop, whether by means of a douceur or some private influence, never can be known. Suffice it to say, the foreign workman, who was so proficient in constructing marine-engines and iron vessels, and who was a capital draughtsman, was now employed in the construction of locoing and clearing their throats, they began to sing. They sang at first a few simple airs, 'Sweet Home' among others. They then attempted more difficult music, and gave selections from Beethoven and Mozart. Between the pieces they chatted with each other in a foreign language, which Mr. motives at Baldwin's, on Broad street, Philadelphia. Placed first as a helper in the forges, it was found that he had the skill of a master smith. It was not very long before his worth was appreciated, and a higher class of machine-work was put into his hands. Still the same restlessness was manifested on the part of the workman, who one day left with wages unclaimed, and was next traced to Baltimore, thence to New York, and then back again to Wilmington. Now, when the Russian Government commenced making the purchase of ships and machinery in the United States some months ago persons owning steam-vessels were somewhat surprised at the knowledge the Russians had of all the ships offered them. The secret was soon disclosed. that the time was 4 o'clock. The concert in his brain had lasted nearly an hour and Wilmington, and Chester were thrown displayed a holf almost the concert with the concert win a half, almost the length of an ordinary rectly in communication with a fine-looking Russian post-captain, speaking English fluently, who recalled to them the workman who had received their wages. The captain, a thorough, practical workman, and at the head of one of the principal imperial naval bureaus, had been sent to the United States by the Russian Government purposely to inspect, in the most thorough manner, the actual character of American work. Of course, the Russian captain was perfectly posted. Vices of construction, slighted work, this officer unhesitatingly spoke about. From his judgment there was no appeal. He knew exactly what was wanted; could estimate with rapidity what such or such a vessel was worth, what re-

Professor Alexander Winchell declares, in the Nashville American, that the abolition of the lectureship recently filled by him is practically "a dismissal from office on account of heresy." He goes on to say: "This heresy consists in holding, with the likes the "Anvil Chorus" much better than great body of scientific men, that a method of evolution has obtained in the history of the world, but not in holding that man is the product of evolution. The overt act on which the accusation is based is the publication of my recent pamphlet, entitled 'Adamites and Pre-Adamites,' ihough, as a fact, a belief in the doctrine of evolution is not there avowed nor taught, and the only position to which strict 'orthodoxy' could object is the opinion that perhaps the black races existed on the earth previously

It is interesting to learn that Mrs. Jenks acted for two months as a Treasury clerk in 1875, and that "when she had nothing else to do" she earned her salary by going into a room with some desks in it, and doing some writing. It is hardly conceivable that there should be another Mrs. Jenks, but it is not entirely improbable that there are both male and female cferks in Washington who serve the Government to little better purpose.- New York Times.

Of Lord Beaconsfield innumerable mots are just now current. Here is one: "A Conservative peer was expressing to the Premier the anxiety with which he looked forward to his prolonged absence from England. 'It won't be a long business,' was the reassuring reply; and, after a pause, Lord Beaconsfield added, 'We mean to carry the position by a koo di mang' (coup de main). The peer in question moved away, muttering as he went, 'They may say what they like about his being a foreigner, about his character being un-English; but, at any rate, there is one thing that is unmistakably British, and that is-his French."

Located as it is in the heart of the city, on Hull street, it offers are advantages to real estate investors. The lot fronts on Hull street 127 feet, upon which is a LARGE THREE-STORY BRICK-AND-FRAME BUILDING, known AS THE OLD TAYERN PROPERTY, which can, at a small cost, be remodelled, and made to pay well. The material is first class. The building was erected years ago of the best of timber, and is to-day superior to my lumber that can be now procured. Special attention of builders and investors is called to this sale of Mancherster's best property.
